"Language is the road ~~of~~ map of a culture. It tells you where they are going." I absolutely agree with this statement. When the words in language become shorter, it means that culture become more minimalistic. And when the language is not changing, that means that culture is not changing too. You can understand other people and their culture when you understand their language. Some nations have same languages and their cultures are similar to each other. For example: I know a lot about cultures of Russian speaking countries and their history because we have one language. And I know a lot about their cuisine, traditions and music, because they are similar to Russian's and we have some things in common. And our cultures would not be different until we have same languages. Language depends on culture and culture also depends on language. When people have same languages, they have same cultures and when people have same cultures, they have same languages. People live in peace when they have same languages and cultures.

In conclusion, I think that language can say everything about other's people culture and how it will change in future and it can say what the culture of other countries was like.

"Language is the road map of a culture. It tells you where they are going." I absolutely agree with this statement. When the words of a language become shorter, it means that culture become minimalistic. And when the ~~language~~ language isn't <sup>not</sup> changing that means that culture ~~doesn't~~ <sup>isn't</sup> changing too. You can understand other people ~~with~~ and their culture when you understand their language. Some nations have same language and their culture is similar to each other. For example: I know a lot about culture of Russian speaking countries ~~beca~~ <sup>and</sup> their history because we have ~~many similar~~ - one language. And I know a lot about their cuisine, traditions and ~~to me~~ because they are similar to Russian's and <sup>we have</sup> some <sup>common</sup> ~~trad~~ things in common. And our cultures <sup>isn't</sup> wouldn't be ~~so~~ <sup>very</sup> different until we have same languages. Language depends on culture and culture depends on language. When people have same language they have same cultures and when people have same cultures, they have same languages. People live in peace when they have same languages and cultures. <sup>It</sup> ~~It~~ can

In conclusion, I think that language can say everything about other's people culture and how it will change in future, <sup>and</sup> ~~who~~ it can <sup>say</sup> ~~how~~ what the culture of other countries was like.
